Creating a Mix of Spooks and Suits: A New Role for Intelligence

Student thesis by Shawn P. Moyer, Naval Postgraduate School, March 2003.

Moyer's thesis examines the role of intelligence in the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). He highlights the critical role that intelligence will play in the nation's counter-terrorism efforts. Moyer notes that intelligence analysts within the DHS will be responsible for acquiring, analyzing, and monitoring intelligence, gathered from federal, state, and local agencies, about potential domestic threats.

Although his thesis was written almost 20 months ago, the issues Moyer raises are still very relevant today. Moyer stresses the importance of 1) developing a process that will coordinate the intelligence gathering by these agencies and 2) establishing an information-sharing network that will enable these agencies to exchange intelligence. Recent developments related to this topic include the recommendations made by the 9/11 Commission. Read more...
